

Fans' Super Power

Anna Iao

K-pop is the huge cultural tsunami that has swept across Asia since the last decade and gained global popularity. With refined makeup, sculptural body figure and synchronized dances, K-pop idols have attracted lots of die-hard fans. K-pop fans are often criticized for following their idols blindly and not knowing that their wholehearted devotion may have a negative impact on them. Today, however, I would like to share with you why we should not underestimate K-pop fans.

K-pop fans always exhibit loyalty and dedication to one or two K-pop groups. The wish to get closer to their idols can break the language and culture barriers. I bet that most of the K-pop fans know what “saranghae” means. Attending Korean lessons is not necessary for them. They can subliminally learn the Korean language from Korean series and song lyrics. Some may dig deeper and eventually master the language. This is K-pop fans' super power. It sounds incredible, doesn't it? They are not geniuses but they can conquer the language barrier with perseverance and persistence.

K-pop fans are extremely nice, helpful and enthusiastic when you share the same interest with them. You can feel a sense of belonging in their fan clubs. The power of love for and dedication to their idols can unite fans from a diversity of backgrounds. K-pop fans can easily forge a bond of friendship with fans from around the world. They are tied together by their devotion to the same idols. It is amazing to have this kind of die-hard friends because they will be as supportive and loyal to you as to their idols.

K-pop fans may acquire new skills while chasing their idols. They will learn to use state-of-the-art technology to videotape their idols' live performances and edit photos of their idols by themselves. They will even create a Facebook fan page to help promote their idols and gather more supporters for their fan clubs.

From my point of view, K-pop fans are not blind, crazy followers though they are crazily talented. That's why we should not underestimate them. Instead, we can learn a lot from them. I respect their love and passion for pursuing their interest. If we are committed to achieving a goal, we will ultimately succeed. Motivation is always the biggest driving force for self-learning and self-improvement. Motivation gives us vigour and determination to make what is deemed impossible possible. So start thinking what you want to achieve in life and you will have the vitality to do it like K-pop fans.
